Our body has a powerful army that 1 protects it from various types of threats. This personal army is called the 2 immune system. Every day we encounter a huge number of bacteria, viruses and other disease-causing 3 organisms. However, we don't 4 fall ill every other day. That is due to our immune system.

The immune system can be 5 divided into two parts – innate and adaptive immunity. The innate immunity is the body's first natural 6 defence against any intruders. Its main goal is to 7 prevent pathogens from entering the body.

There is also the adaptive immunity. This system is more 8 efficient, as it can differentiate between different types of pathogens.

The job of the immune system is to fight these invaders and get them out of the body. What's so incredible about the immune system is that it 9 remembers how to fight the infection, so if the pathogen comes back for round two, the body can beat it off 10 straight away!
